RE: 100-lines-or-less Javascript Challenge, ESRI Developer Summit

Stan McShinsky is scheduled to attend the ESRI Developer Summit in Palm Springs, CA, March 25-29, 2013. An activity at the Developer Summit is a contest to write a mapping application in just 100 lines of javascript code. In order for Stan to participate, he needs approval under our current ethics rules for government employees. The awards for this contest include a free registration for a future ESRI Developer Summit and other ESRI products. Each of these awards, if won, would directly benefit Provo City and Stan's skillset, as does the contest itself as it challenges his coding ability. As Stan's supervisor, I fully endorse this activity.
